CONFERENCE - THE USE OF RECYCLED MATERIALS IN CONSTRUCTION

In 2008, 43% of all waste produced in Scotland was from the construction industry. By preventing waste and recycling construction materials, businesses and industries in Scotland can reduce their costs.

This conference will highlight the aims of Scottish policy on waste management and recycling in construction. It will present the outcomes of research on the use of recycled aggregate in concrete and other recycled materials for different uses in construction.

The talks will also look at potential markets for recycled materials, and experts will share their industry experience about current practice in using recycled building material. Three architects will talk about the challenges and achievements in applying recycled materials in building design.

This conference is suitable for architects, construction engineers, building surveyors, contractors and suppliers of building materials.

A CPD certificate will be provided for delegates.
